Luscinia svecica is a widespread breeder across much of northern Europe, and occurs more patchily farther south, with Europe accounting for less than a quarter of its global breeding range. Its European breeding population is very large (>4,500,000 pairs), and was stable between 1970–1990. Although there were declines in a few countries during 1990–2000, the stronghold population in Russia probably remained stable, and trends were stable or increasing across most of its European range. Consequently, the species is provisionally evaluated as Secure.
